Update

Section 1512 of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) requires quarterly reporting of all expenditures and jobs funded with ARRA funds to the federal government through the web portal www.federalreporting.gov no later than 10 days following the end of a quarter. The third reporting period was March 10, 2010 and represented reports from the first quarter of 2010. Every North Carolina state agency required to submit a report did so successfully by this deadline.

Through the first three reporting periods, North Carolina has maintained a strong position within the top 10 states for jobs funded with Recovery Act dollars. The following tables show North Carolina's relative position within the top 10 states, and a breakout of the categories of funding that have resulted in funded jobs in North Carolina. The next reporting period is July 14, 2010, and the information from that reporting period should be displayed on www.recovery.gov by July 30, 2010.

Introduction to Guidebook

The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (Public Law 111-5) was signed into law on February 17, 2009. The bill contained an estimated $787 billion worth of programmatic spending and target tax reductions and incentives, and is divided into two parts: Part A and Part B. Part B represents roughly one-third of the total value of the ARRA and contains the tax provisions, including tax cuts; rebate, and incentives; and the bond provisions. Part A of the ARRA, representing about two thirds of the $787 billion, contains the infrastructure, programmatic and direct grant provisions. Governor Perdue created the Office of Economic Recovery and Investment (OERI) on February 17, 2009 to oversee, coordinate and facilitate North Carolina's response to Part A of the ARRA.

The provisions of Part A can be grouped into three broad categories: Countercyclical Funds, Appropriations and New Programs, and Safety Net Programs. Each broad category of funding is designed to stabilize the state budget, encourage economic recovery, invest in the future economy of the country, and assist the most vulnerable citizens of North Carolina in different ways.

Countercyclical Funds are funds to programs and budget categories that are most vulnerable to cuts during economic downturns. In the ARRA, the countercyclical funds are two of the largest individual allocations to North Carolina: the State Fiscal Stabilization Funds (SFSF) and increase in Medicaid funding, also known as Federal Medical Assistance Percentage (FMAP). The SFSF was bifurcated into a flex fund, which was eligible for most governmental purposes, and the Education Fund, to be used for education-specific purposes but particularly to preserve jobs in education. North Carolina utilized 90% of its $258,000,000 of flex fund allocation to preserve jobs in Public Safety. The FMAP provisions increase the percentage of federal funding to Medicaid-eligible services. FMAP increases overall spending in Medicaid to help meet the increased demand for Medicaid during an economic downturn. In addition to assisting needy populations, the FMAP program helps stabilize the state budget by allowing the state to supplant the funds that would have otherwise been spent on Medicaid (if not for the federal percentage spending increase) for other budgetary uses.

Appropriations and New Programs are direct appropriations into existing programs, usually over and above existing spending; the funding of previously created but never initiated programs and the creation of new programs at the state level. This category would include allocations to preexisting programs, the transportation and transit grants and competitive federal funding opportunities won by state agencies, such as NCDENR's successful Clean Diesel Grant Program. North Carolina has very little flexibility with the use of this category of funding and must spend these additional funds according to existing state and federal laws and rules, contracts, and grant agreements. These were some of the first grants awards, and several of these vanguard programs, such as the State Revolving Fund and the ARRA Transportation Grants, had requirements that these funds be spent quickly to facilitate the employment mission of the ARRA. The final group of programs in this category consists of programs designed to establish the foundations of growth for a new national and state economy. These programs are designed with innovation in mind and include additional funding for university research, a historic broadband and technology grant program, and renewable energy incentives and green energy programs, including the greening of homes and public buildings.

Safety Net Programs are the third and final broad category of ARRA funding and consist of programs designed to help populations made particularly vulnerable by the economic crisis. These generally include increases in existing programs, most notably the increase in both benefit level and duration of unemployment payments. This category also increases non-monetary commodity assistance programs for elderly and homeless populations and additional increases in the traditional grant programs. For example, the Justice Assistance Grant program provides grants both directly to the state for distribution to local shelters and crime-victims assistance programs, and also includes federal competitive grants to hire more public safety officers in communities. This category contains programs that not only help those harmed by the current economic climate, but also assist the jobless in retraining. The three main programs in this area are the Work Force Investment Act Program for adults, the Workforce Investment Act Program for youth, and the Displaced Worker Program. Funds from these sources helped establish Governor Perdue's rapid-retraining program in Community Colleges, the '12 in 6' Program. Finally, there are two new programs designed to assist North Carolinians struggling with foreclosure: The Neighborhood Stabilization Program and the Homelessness Prevention Program.

The three major program categories combined total about 6.3 billion dollars in additional state funding between 2008 and 2011. Various North Carolina public and private entities are seeking additional discretionary and competitive grants. The OERI is charged with overseeing and tracking ARRA funds within the state and acting as the responsible agent to the public for transparency and accountability of ARRA funds. This includes both the ARRA's Section 1511 reporting requirements and the responsibility to keep the public informed as to where ARRA funds are going and what projects they are funding.

To that end, the OERI has created a document that provides a county-by-county breakdown of funds that have been spent or committed, when county information is available. Other allocations are still to be made and will be reflected in subsequent updates. Please see the footnotes on the spreadsheet. The remainder of this document provides explanatory, supporting and financial data for the individual categories as represented by columns in the spreadsheet. The final section provides contact information for district, program and department heads. This document is created with periodic updates in mind, and the supporting sections, which are available on www.ncrecover.gov are updated on a frequent basis.
